

James Strock

James Strock is a speaker, writer, entrepreneur, and reformer in business, government, and politics.

He possesses extensive experience as a keynote speaker, interviewer, convenor, moderator, and emcee before a range of audiences in the United States and other nations.

Strock founded the Serve to Lead Group in 1997, providing services in various capacities in environment-energy, leadership development, mediation-conflict resolution, and other areas. The company adds value by assembling world-class teams to undertake projects for a range of clients.

Strock has served in various public roles, including as founding Secretary for Environmental Protection for California, chief law enforcement officer of the US Environmental Protection Agency, general counsel of the U.S. Office of Personnel Management, and special counsel to the US Senate Environment & Public Works Committee. Politically independent, he has advised office holders of both major political parties, as well as non-partisan projects.

He is the author of four books: Serve to Lead 2.0, Disrupt Politics, Theodore Roosevelt on Leadership, and Reagan on Leadership.

Strock writes The New Nationalist on Substack. He hosts the Serve to Lead podcast.

Strock is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and serves on the advisory board of the Theodore Roosevelt Association. He is based in Rancho Santa Fe, California.
